place of true quill.feathers, are supplied with plumes of a pure and beautiful white. It is in order to procure these that the ostrich is hunted. This employment is very exciting; and the fleetest Arabian horses are necessary to pursue it with success. The ostrich cannot fly, but runs with surprising swiftness; but, unfortunately, frequently turns in circles, thus giving the pursuing horsemen a great advantage; but even at this disadvantage the hunters, for the safety of their horses, are obliged to relieve each other frequently, and then the chase lasts eight or ten hours. "What time she lifted up herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider;" Job xxxix. 18.

The ostrich has been called a cruel bird to her offspring. On the slightest noise, or trivial occasion, she will leave her nest or her young, to which perhaps she will never return. The Arabs often meet with young ostriches straggling and moaning about like so many distressed orphans. "The daughter of my people," says Jeremiah, "has become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness;" Lam. iv. 3. These young are from the size of a pullet, up. The eggs usually weigh about three pounds; they are of a dirty white color, marbled with yellow, and when found good, are eaten by the Arabs. [Ev. Guardian.

THE COMPANION IS FREE!

This Number of the Youth's Companion completes the twenty-first year since it commenced as a weekly periodical. It is believed to be the first Newspaper ever published for Children and Youth.

In good old times, fifty years ago, when I engaged as an Apprentice to the Printing business, it was the custom, (and it was the law,) that boys were in subjection to their fathers, or to the masters to whom they were bound as Apprentices, until they were twenty-one years of age. Then, and not till then, they were considered to be free—a new suit of clothes was given them—and the twenty-first birth day was celebrated as a festival. They were then esteemed as men, and entitled to be called Mister. But, at the present day, it is not so. Boys too often break away from parental restraint and instruction, before they have learned what is necessary for their success in business; and consequently few of them acquire the character and property which their fathers have obtained by a long course of patient industry. Too many of them try to live upon the earnings of others; but how can they do that with a clear conscience?

It is a singular coincidence, that the Companion, after having been published in the office of the Boston Recorder twenty-one years, is, this week, separated from that office, by the removal of the Recorder to another building. This apprenticeship of the Companion was in its infancy necessary for its support; but it has now, by industry and economy in its management, attained a strength and maturity by which it can stand alone, the number of subscribers being greater than were ever before on the books, and the testimonials of approbation more numerous than ever. It is only necessary for the Subscribers to pay their Bills promptly, to insure a continuance of the Companion as long as there are Children and Youth to read it.

The Companion will still "speak as a child" to the infant—relate instructive stories to the youth—and give facts and suggestions for the assistance of Parents in the religious education of their children.

We have this week finished the History of the Pilgrim Fathers, which has given the circumstances of the infancy of this great nation—and the principles of those good men, by whose toils and self-denial its foundation was laid. Next week, we shall commence the Life of Washington and the History of the American Revolution—and we think if these two subjects were well understood by all our youth, and if they would imitate the example of those great men whom all delight to honor, our Country, by the blessing of God, would long continue prosperous and happy.

The Youth's Companion will continue to be published at No. 11 Cornhill, Boston—where there are a number of blank Receipts, which we should be happy to fill up with the names of delinquent Subscribers.

The twenty-first Volume will in a few weeks be bound, and for sale at $1 or $1,25, according to the style of binding. Some of the previous Volumes may also be had.

A New Volume will commence next week—a very convenient time for New Subscribers to begin, as they will have a complete Volume with Index, for binding in a book, at the close of the year. If any Subscribers should find their papers stopped, when they wish them continued, they will please inform us immediately, so as not to lose any of the numbers.
